WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

An upper level trough will cause inland temperatures to fall slightly below normal over the next few days. Coastal temperatures shall remain seasonal with persistent clouds through the weekend and partial clearing each afternoon.

Medford Weather:

An upper level trough axis will shift through the area today. Most of the area will remain dry but there is the possibility of an isolated thunderstorm in southwest Siskiyou County this afternoon and evening. Highs today will be about 5 degrees below normal for inland areas, but 3-5 degrees above normal along the immediate coast. Temperatures on Friday will be similar to today or just a bit warmer. This weekend the forecast area can expect cooler temperatures and light showers.

Reno Weather:

A few showers and storms will be possible across central Nevada this afternoon. A drier air mass will continue to filter across the Sierra and far western Nevada through the start of the weekend. Temperatures will warm up to near seasonal normal by this weekend with above average temperatures possible by midweek.

San Francisco Weather:

Temperatures will stay cooler today as an upper level trough remains over the area. Slightly warmer temperatures are expected Friday through Sunday as the trough lifts northeast. More significant warming is possible next week, especially inland.

WEATHER

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry weather is expected across the area for the next 8 days. Daytime temperatures will be a little below normal through the weekend and then climb to above normal by early next week.

Hanford Weather:

Mainly dry conditions with near normal temperatures are expected for the remainder of the week through the weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

A broad upper level trough will linger across the forecast area through today bringing continued night through morning low clouds into the valleys and near normal temperatures. High pressure will build into the region late this week into next week where high temperatures will be a few degrees above normal across inland areas and low clouds will be limited to coastal areas by early next week.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

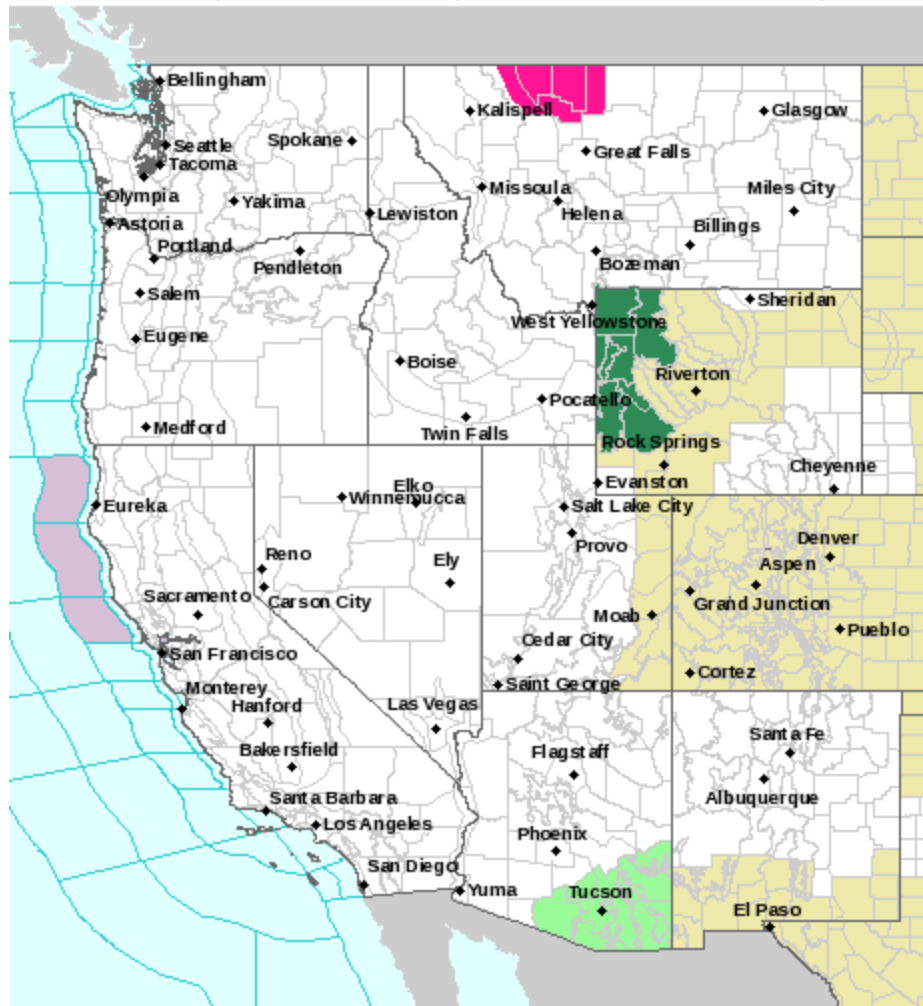

Onshore flow and a deep marine layer will keep inland high temperatures below average again today, but the marine layer will gradually decrease into this weekend for warmer weather and less extensive low clouds. It will be much warmer for the second half of next week as high pressure builds westward over the region and the marine layer cowers back to the coastal strip.

Southeast California Weather:

A drier southwesterly flow over the region will bring isolated showers and thunderstorms today and Friday. Temperatures will warm to above normal levels over the weekend, with highs approaching the 110 degree mark for some locales on the lower deserts by Sunday. More moisture returns over the weekend, for an increasing threat of isolated thunderstorms over the lower deserts into early next week.
